She-Devil

Mary Fisher (Streep) lives in a palace by the Sea. She is Pretty and Rich and famous and thin, the author of 32 passionate best sellers, drawn from her own romantic research.

Ruth Patchett (Barr) lives in a tract house in Suburbia. She is awkward, well-meaning and overweight. Her life centers around her husband, Bob, an ambitious young accountant with a roving eye.

Mary & Ruth Meet over a drink... a spilled dring... at a literary party. When Ruth splashes wine on Mary's gown, Bob takes the opportunity to drive th novelist home—and drive home his theories of business management.

He's rewarded with a night of erotic abandon worthy of one of Mary's heroines and a promise of a very influential client. Soon he becomes her new lover as well, leaving Ruth and the kids with the stinging retort: "You're a bad mother, a lousy wife and a terrible cook. In fact I Don't think you're a woman at all... you're a she-devi!"

As far as I'm concerned Bob, you couldn't have been more right! Barr, whose stage persona is a mutinous, self-described "domestic goddess" who's source of comedy draws from her own experience as a housewife.

"I've always felt my humor reflected this woman who finally has emerged victorious," she explains in a recent People interview. "I belch at the audience and swear and fartand stuff. That's who I am. That's my act"

"I see myself as a strong and loving person, and what got me through this incredible year was having faith and hope- I guess I did'nt fit in (L.A.). I walk around feeling that nobody in this town likes me. I never thought Hollywood was going to be no picnic. I knew it was a lot of bullshit. People think I went wacko and turned into a star with a great big head, got out of control and acted erratically in public. It's because people in high places in this town believe the tabloids that people burn their trash with in the Midwest. One theory is that the're all skinny, chinless, latent homosexuals with car phones and intense problems with women. These are the undercover gays who don't know they're gay. Real gay guys I like. That's one theory. Which is probably the truth. The other theory is that women just go, "God, she's fat." Most women in this town never get past the weight. It's all this veiled shit of "Are you sure he fucks you?" They totally erase my sexuality because they think fat erases sexuality. I lost 100lbs., and I suppose I did look better & attracted more male attention. But my sexual appetite was'nt any stronger. Only thing I ever thought about was food and belts.I was really into the look, but I was also very hungry. The truth is, I have always had men wether I was 200 or 400 lbs. Maybe I had more when I was skinnier, but there ain't enough hours in the day anyhow."
